SLI Call for Special Topics Proposals

We are now accepting topic proposals for future issues. Any scholar who wishes to propose a special issue topic for Studies in the Literary Imagination is invited to do so in a 1,000–1,500-word proposal. Please include a working title, an overview of the proposed topic, a brief summary of pertinent issues and figures, and a current C.V. Each consulting editor of Studies in the Literary Imagination should adhere to the guidelines listed below. From inception to completion, the project takes approximately two years.

Responsibilities of Consulting Editor: Choose a general subject, a focused topic, and a title (subject to approval of the SLI Committee); Solicit approximately eight original essays, each of about twenty pages long, prepared in current MLA documentation format; Perform first line edit and return essays to authors for revision; Write introduction (Editor's Comment); Submit introduction and clean essays to the journal editor, along with brief bios (about 50 words) for consulting editor(s) and contributors; Receive and correct camera-ready copy and return corrected copy to editor.

Contact editor Paul H. Schmidt or managing editor Lori Howard to submit your proposal or request further information:
